FOUNDATION

© Forty-three per cent of total disbursements appropriated by this great institution in 1944 were for the conservation of public health and the advancement of science.

The accompanying illustration, from "The Rockefeller Foundation Review for 1944," shows an RCA Electron Microscope "used for typhus studies in the Laboratories of the International Health Division."

This powerful new tool of research fittingly symbolizes the progressive attitude and approach of The Rockefeller Foundation towards its high objectives.

In many research and control laboratories throughout the nation, this remarkable instrument is successfully helping institutional and industrial organizations to render their labors more fruitful.
