GENERAL SCIENCE

Ancients Taught Science As a Writing Exercise

► IN 300 B. C. in what is today Iraq the ancient Sumerians taught the sciences of botany, zoology, geography, mineralogy, mathematics, and linguistics. They instructed their youth in these sciences, not because they had technological application, but primarily to teach the difficult art of writing Sumerian script.

The land of Sumer, "was the seat of the predominant civilization in the ancient Near East," Dr. Samuel Noah Kramer of the University of Pennsylvania told the American Association for the Advancement of Science annual meeting.

In order to teach future scribes how to write, he said, the Sumerian "professors" compiled lists of words which students committed to memory, and then reproduced as copying exercises.

These lists were actually classified tables of facts pertaining to the different sciences. These very early classifications of specialized knowledge—actually a form of science textbooks—are "already beginning to prove of no little significance for the history of science," Dr. Kramer said.
