

Double-Shoulder Harness Gives Best Protection

➤ SHOULDER harnesses contribute significantly to the safety of automobile passengers.

A double-shoulder harness anchored at about shoulder height, used in combination with a lap seat belt, offers the highest measure of protection to persons involved in highway accidents, studies by the Los Angeles Police Department show.

Various types of seat belts have been used and tested on the job by the Los Angeles police since 1950.

In one case a police car slammed broadside into a utility pole with enough force to displace the entire rear section of the body from the frame. The driver reported that the door flew open when the car hit and then banged shut when his vehicle spun around. A double-shoulder harness kept him securely inside the car and unharmed by the swinging door.

However, tests of single strap harnesses on a dummy disclosed serious neck damage at impacts at high speeds in the range of 60 miles per hour.

Mr. J. L. Fulton of the Los Angeles Police Department reported that although restraining devices may not be a total solution to the problem of automobile safety, they certainly spare people from serious injury and death in many situations. In addition to being particularly valuable in protecting passengers involved in right angle collisions, they guard them against the dangers of faulty door locks, instrument panels, dashboards and glass.

Worldwide Mail Delivery Within Minutes Predicted

➤ DELIVERY of letters anywhere in the world within minutes after a letter is posted would be possible using an orbiting satellite as a post office, the chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission reported.

Dr. Glenn T. Seaborg predicted such a worldwide postal delivery system might be available "sooner than we think." The Nobelist also suggested the possibility of an orbital newsletter, bringing detailed news in any language from any where in the world at any time of the day or night.

Communications satellites hold the key to these "highly imaginative" developments, Dr. Seaborg told the Western Electronics convention in Los Angeles. Another possibility, he said, is that global conference facilities will make "international business meetings as common in the future as local telephone calls are today."

Nuclear energy will help in making all these possible some day, Dr. Seaborg noted.

Tells How to Make Money Writing Short Paragraphs

Chicago Man Reveals a Short Cut to Authorship

Discloses little-known angle by which beginners often get paid five to ten times more per word than the rates paid to famous authors. Now anyone who can write a sentence in plain English can write for money without spending weary years "learning to write."

FOR years and years a relatively small number of people have had a "corner" on one of the most profitable authors' markets ever known. They've been going quietly along selling thousands and thousands of contributions. None of them have had to be trained authors. None of them have been "big name" writers. Yet, in hundreds of cases they have been paid from five to ten times as much per word as was earned by famous authors.

The successful men and women in this field had such a good thing that they kept it pretty well to themselves. Mr. Benson Barrett was one of these people. For years he enjoyed a steady income—made enough money in spare time to pay for a fine farm near Chicago.

Finally, Mr. Barrett decided to let others in on his method. Since then he has shown a number of other men and women how to write for money. He has not given them lessons in writing. He has not put them through a long course of study or practice. In fact, most of his protégés have started mailing contributions to magazines within two weeks after starting.

Mr. Barrett says that the only skill required is that the beginner be able to write a sentence in plain English. Almost anyone with a grade school education can write well enough to follow Mr. Barrett's plan, because the contributions you will send to magazines are rarely longer than one paragraph.

Shut-ins, housewives, folks who are retired on small incomes, even employed men and women who like to use idle hours in a constructive way—all types are making money on short paragraphs.

Mr. Barrett does not teach you to write. He shows you what to write, what form to put it in, and who to send it to. He shows you a simple method for getting ideas by the hundreds. He gives you a list of more than 200 magazines that are looking for this kind of material and will buy from beginners. In other words, he teaches you a method, an angle, a plan for starting to write right away for money.

IF you would like to see your writing in print and get paid for it—just send your name on a postcard to Mr. Barrett. He will send full information about his plan of coaching by return mail—postage prepaid. He makes no charge for this information. And, no salesman will call on you. You decide, at home, whether you'd like to try his plan. If the idea of getting paid for writing short paragraphs appeals to you, ask Mr. Barrett for this information.

No telling where it might lead. Such a small start might even open opportunities for real authorship. And, since it can't cost you anything more than a postcard, you'll certainly want to get all the facts. Address postcard to Mr. Benson Barrett, 6216 N. Clark Street, Dept. 163-J, Chicago, Ill. 60626.
