Ultraviolet water purifier

All forms of bacteria contaminating water are destroyed by ultraviolet light in this 36-inch-long by 7 1/2-inch-square purifying system. The unit is automatically controlled so that if the power should fail or the lamp burn out, the water supply will immediately cut off. The device is especially useful in applications where chemical purification cannot be used.

Electronic current detector

The possibility of spark-induced explosion or fire from a short circuit is eliminated by this compact electronic instrument that immediately detects and cuts off the current in a system with defective wiring. The highly sensitive device, easily installed in home or buildings, also stops the flow of current if it starts to enter foreign materials—such as the body or water, as when a live wire is touched or an appliance is accidentally dropped in a bathtub. The quick cutoff prevents electric shock or electrocution.
