Make-your-own filmstrip kit

Students as well as teachers will find this kit useful. Teachers can add frames to existing materials or make strips of their own to meet specific needs, while students can create filmstrips to illustrate their reports and projects. The standard 35-millimeter film has a treated, blank surface on which one can draw, write, type and erase.

Mechanical hand

Lifting loads of several tons, uprooting trees or handling delicate objects are possibilities of this mechanical hand. The hand has five rubber fingers which are constructed so that they curl around and grasp an object, holding it securely when under gas or fluid pressure and straightening out only when the pressure is removed.

The closed-end, hose-like fingers are attached to a metal manifold and will grip objects of any shape or size. They will lift or pull as required.

Silver-filled epoxies

Neither copper nor carbon are contained in these high-conductivity silver-filled epoxies for electronic applications. The silver filling means that no drift in conductivity occurs after prolonged exposure to high temperatures or strong electrolytes. The one-component epoxies are suitable for such applications as assembly, grounding and shielding of potentiometers, crystals, oscillators and other frequency-control devices. Their adhesion to glass, ceramics, copper and other metals permits use for cold soldering of miniaturized circuits.

Carbon monoxide alarm

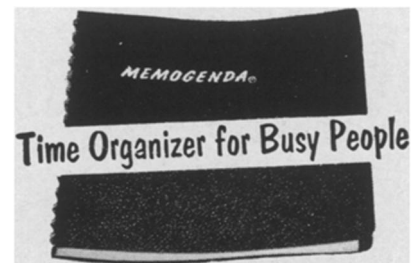

Personnel in industrial plants, mines and chemical plants as well as garages and schools are protected from carbon monoxide poisoning by this alarm system. It warns of an increase in concentration of the gas before dangerous levels are reached and allows time for preventive measures to be taken. False alarms due to minor fluctuations are minimized by measuring both the concentration of the gas and the duration of exposure. The 4x7x9½-inch unit responds to the presence of the gas by a color change which is detected by its photo-optical system, automatically sounding an alarm.
