Experiments and Research With Humans: Values in Conflict

Research on fetuses and on children. Prisoners and the institutionalized as subjects for experiments. Who weighs the societal advantages against the individual risks? What constitutes responsible research practices? Presentations and discussions by prominent biomedical researchers, physicians, lawyers, ethicists, and government officials during a recent public forum consider such controversial matters as informed consent by the research candidate, the means used to obtain volunteers, the equitable distribution of risk throughout society, and the future role of federal legislation. ISBN 0-309-02347-5; 1975, vi + 240 pages, paperbound, 8 1/2" x 11", $5.00

Ethics of Health Care

The emphasis of this volume is on the differing values of doctors, patients, and society as a whole. Papers and formal commentaries by experts in law, medicine, ethics and religion, economics, and psychiatry examine the many facets to our present health care system. Discussed are policies for care of the aged, the government's role in life and death decisions, various treatment settings and approaches, and the effect of mass media on patients' attitudes. Also considered are the factors affecting professional values, such as the selection process for medical school and the subsequent training. ISBN 0-309-02249-5; 1974, xi + 313 pages, paperbound, $6.00
