Have you ever gazed at the vastness of the night sky and wished you knew more about the stars? Now, with one of the world's foremost astronomers as your guide, you'll learn how to "read" the stars, identify the constellations and follow their trajectories through the sky, month by month. You'll find plenty of information about the planets, the sun and moon (and their eclipses), meteors and comets (including Halley's, of course) along with an abundance of illustrations and charts.

Unique to this book are four star charts — one for each season — printed in luminous glowing ink by a special silkscreen process only recently perfected. These charts store energy when exposed to light, like a solar battery calculator. The amateur astronomer can take them out at night and read them while gazing at the stars overhead.

THE BREAKING OF BODIES AND MINDS

Torture, Psychiatric Abuse, and the Health Professions

Edited by Eric Stover and Elena O. Nightingale, M.D.

W. H. Freeman, 1985, 319 pages, 9" x 6 1/2", paperback, $11.95.

The most fundamental precept of medical ethics is primum non nocere — above all, do no harm. Yet in repressive regimes throughout the world, some health professionals have become willing or unwilling participants in torture and punitive psychiatry. The expert contributors to this timely new volume detail the historical and social contexts of these abuses, the ways in which they are medically "justified" and the efforts of other medical personnel to put a stop to them.
