

Explorers and mapmakers were among the first and most important of the creators of the modern world, discovering, recording and reporting the routes that now link the once-divided regions of the Earth. It is to those pioneers who looked beyond their immediate horizons that we owe our modern picture of the world. Their achievements, often made in hostile environments and at the mercy of the elements, were heroic and spectacular. The world of 500 years ago, divided among regions that knew little or nothing of each other, was transformed by their endeavors into today's shared world culture.

This major new atlas maps the routes of these explorers, tells their stories, and sets them in the context of their times. It covers more than 3,000 years of exploration, from the first mapmakers in China to today's deep-space probes. More than 180 period maps, many of them masterpieces of the cartographer's art, help chart our evolving image of the world. The atlas also contains more than 130 specially commissioned, authoritative modern maps that look in detail at every major voyage of discovery. In addition, numerous contemporary illustrations highlight related subjects, ranging from chronology to zoology, navigation to shipbuilding. The detailed accompanying text has been prepared by 24 leading specialists in exploration and cartography.

Eedited by Dr. Felipe Fernández-Armesto, the leading exploration historian, The Times Atlas of World Exploration provides a fascinating picture of humanity's enduring quest for knowledge of the world.
