

Everything You Ever Wanted to Know About Anything

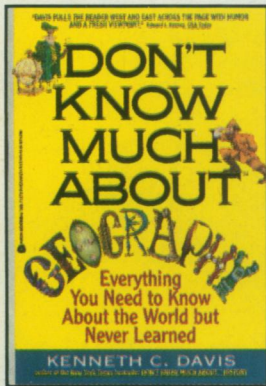

Find All The Answers in These Fun-Filled Trivia Books

Imponderables™ — the Series and Who Put the Butter in Butterfly? by David Feldman

Why is indecision called waffling? Why is the Left Wing liberal and the Right Wing conservative? Why do golf balls have dimples? Why are the letters "Q" and "Z" missing from the telephone buttons? The answers to these and hundreds of other questions can be found in this assortment of books from the man who always asks why and always seems to find a reasonable answer. Many questions are posed by readers, who receive insightful and entertaining answers.

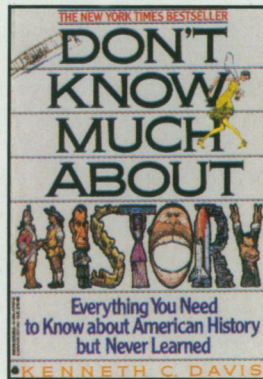

HarperPerennial, approx. 250 p. each, 5 1/4" x 8", paperback, $10.00 each

Where was the Garden of Eden? What's so bad about the Badlands? Why does the Nile run North? Davis proves that there is a lot more to geography than labeling countries on a map.

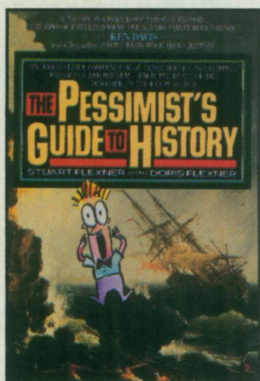

For all those who have felt geographically ignorant ever since gas stations stopped handing out free maps, here is all they need to know in one enormously informative and highly entertaining volume.

Avon Books, 1993, 384 p. 5 1/4" x 8", paperback, $11.00

For those who dozed through American History 101 or those who need a refresher course, Don't Know Much About History is a good catch-up. This book clears up many myths and misconceptions about historical "facts" and answers many questions such as what were the pumpkin papers and why was Kansas bloody?

Avon Books, 1991, 462 p., 5 1/4" x 8", paperback, $11.00

For every spectacular discovery throughout history there have been a hundred devastating epidemics. In this fascinating, fact-filled and devilishly entertaining collection of disasters and dastardly deeds, popular reference historian Stuart Flexner views the development of civilization through a whimsical, somewhat jaundiced eye—and brings to light the darkest events in human history since Cain and Abel took sibling rivalry to the max.

Avon Books, 1992, 387 p., 5 1/4" x 8", paperback, $12.00
