Tap valve

Capable of piercing galvanized pipe up to one inch in external diameter without special tools for cutting and drilling, this heavy-duty tap valve can be installed in minutes, with no interruption of flow through the line. The device is clamped on the pipe at the point where a tap line is desired. A turn of a wrench forces the unit's steel needle through the pipe to form a 1/4-inch opening, and a standard 3/8-inch flare coupling can then be attached. Price: $4.95.

Sealing zipper

Manufactured in any length and with different elastomers depending upon use, this sealing zipper is so constructed that increased pressure on either of its sides causes it to become compressed to form a tight seal. Useful for sealing liquids, corrosives, or materials under pressure, this fastener also finds applications in protective clothing for corrosive environments, waterproof covers and inflatable buildings.

Pressure sensitive paint

A drop of this pressure sensitive paint, which can be applied to almost any conducting surface, such as aluminum foil and coated mylar, makes a force transducer. It is applied between two conducting surfaces for applications such as a barometric pickup or a solid state relay having no moving parts. It can be used to operate circuits, relays and similar components.
