TECHNOLOGY

Develop Thermoelectric Industrial Generator

► THE FIRST thermoelectric power generator for industrial use has been delivered to the Northern Illinois Gas Company, Aurora, Ill. Designed and built by the Westinghouse Electric Corporation, its electricity will be used to help prevent gas pipelines of the Illinois company from corroding as gas flows through.

In order to produce electric power, propane gas is burnt in the generator, its hot gases passing through an insulated chimney within. Thermoelectric couples, or two different metals joined at their ends, generate electricity as the heated gases pass through them.
