ASTRONOMY

New 'Stonehenge' Found in Scotland

► A NEW "STONEHENGE," a pattern of huge standing rocks used by Stone Age man to mark the seasons, has been revealed in Scotland.

The array at Callanish could also have been used to predict the most likely time for eclipses, as was Stonehenge. The Callanish site is on Lewis, the northernmost island of the Outer Hebrides, about 80 miles north of Barra.

Callanish consists of a ring of 13 stones with a central great rock, an avenue and other deliberately set rows of stones. The stones are aligned to show the direction of the rising and setting of the sun and moon at solstice and at equinox.

The astronomical line-up is "indisputable," Dr. Gerald S. Hawkins of Boston University, Smithsonian Astrophysical Observatory and Harvard College Observatory reported. The suggestion that the pattern could also have been used to compute eclipse seasons is conjectural, Dr. Hawkins stated in Science 147:127, 1965.
