THE scientific articles in the new Encyclopaedia Britannica were written by some of the greatest authorities of our time. Many of the living Nobel prizemen, including three of those named this year, are among the 3,500 distinguished contributors.

"There can be no question of the scholarly reliability of the work," writes President James R. Angell of Yale University in The Saturday Review of Literature. "It meets the need for accurate, digested, synthesized information," says Dr. Raymond Pearl of Johns Hopkins University.

A Superb Guide to Science

Science, in all its branches, has been recorded with amazing completeness and by master hands. The new Britannica is the first and only reference work which has had prestige enough and resources enough to seek out the greatest authorities and the latest data.

This is the only encyclopaedia ever published in which you can consult at an instant's notice Bohr on Atom, Millikan on Electron, Aston on Isotopes, Compton on Compton Effect, Carrel on Tissue Culture, Perrin on Brownian Movement, the Duc de Broglie on X-Rays, Morgan on Acids, Schade on Rubber, MacLeod on Insulin, etc.

15,000 Illustrations 500 Maps

In actual time and money, three years and more than $2,000,000 were spent before a single volume of the new Britannica was sent to press.

The editorial boards comprised the finest minds of two hemispheres. Outstanding authorities of 50 countries are among the contributors to the new Britannica.

The newest data were made available by the world's leading research bureaus. Both industrial and governmental laboratories have played a large part in this magnificent undertaking.

More than 15,000 illustrations, of which fully 30% are devoted to scientific and industrial subjects, and 500 up-to-date maps are included in this great new work.
