'PHONE GAS MASK

Gas attacks will not stop telephone conversations, if war comes again. Newest thing in military gas masks in this German invention with built-in telephone transmitter, which plugs into the transmitter of the modern type hand set. The mask is manufactured by the Draegerwerk, of Luebeck, makers of gas masks and other safety devices for industrial as well as military use.

THE AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF GENERAL ISAAC J. WISTAR

(1827-1905)

Published December, 1937

Almost hermetically sealed for 32 years after his death, the autobiography of General Isaac J. Wistar, colorful character of a colorful period, gives the American reading public a fresh, first-hand account of the nation's roisterous makers, from the Forty-Niners to the early industrialists.

Written from his diary and contemporary notes, Wistar's opus was intended only for close kinsmen's consumption. It tells with especial frankness of the gun-fights and slayings, raw deals and chicanery of the opening of the Far West. In these Wistar, though of heroic stature, is not a hero to be emulated by good little boys. His will, upon his death in 1905, prohibited publication of the autobiography for at least 5 years. In 1914, The Wistar Institute of Anatomy and Biology, which he endowed, cautiously printed 250 copies with a foreword which bound their select readers to confidence.

This new limited edition is published, turning new light on historical controversies of the Civil War period and giving naturalists one of the few eye-witness accounts of the virgin wonderland of the Northwest by a nature lover who literally blazed its trails.
